Community Based Policing is a philosophy, not just another program.

The Concord Police Department believes all coworkers must be involved in fighting crime and the fear of crime in our community in the Community Based Policing approach. Concord integrates three approaches into its philosophy. The first is strong community partnerships to fight crime and the fear of crime. The second part of our philosophy is active, formulized problem solving. The third component is accountability. This requires officers and commanders to be accountable for crime and disorder issues in the neighborhoods they police.

Concord's population has grown from less than 17,000 residents in 1980 to approximately 27,000 in 1990 and 56,000 in 2000; the community approaches 84,000 people today. Concord is currently the twelfth largest City in North Carolina by population and seventh by land area (60.7 square miles, up from 9.6 in 1980).
